Somewhere on the Water

February 13, 2022 – Sunday
68th day of our adventure.

Superbowl Sunday

Easy going day for us today.
We are nice and cozy at the Ocean Yacht Marina, Portsmouth, VA.

Last night we had leftovers and watched the Olympics.

Trying to sleep late here is not easy. We are surrounded by Navy Ships that have 24/7 working crews. That very loud whistle that sounds off every time the crane moves, sounded off at 7:18 a.m. That is too early on Sunday for me! Haleigh mentioned that one night she heard it as late as 12:18 p.m.

At 8:00 a.m. They played the National Anthem on gigantic loudspeakers for all of Norfolk to hear.

Haleigh baked brownies, made deviled eggs and other goodies for later when we watch the Super Bowl.

Mark adjusted the dock lines, went to the marina store trying to buy a t-shirt but ended up buying beer instead. Yuengling. First-time buyer. His overall take on it is that it is better than Budweiser.

Before tapping into his new beer purchase he spent a good productive morning on the computer gathering crap that IRS seems to think we need to provide for our tax accountant.

We watched the Olympics until NBC switched over to football coverage. That is when I worked on the website. I redesigned the Health & Wellness page and I am going to start uploading recipes that Haleigh and I cook for our family here on the boat. Check it out. Click on Recipes & more on the main menu or just click here: <https://alongsidecreations.com/health-wellbeing/>

A slow work in progress so please check back frequently.

I typed and uploaded February 5, 2022.

Deviled Eggs are easy and Mark loves them.

Mark boiled up some shrimp with Old Bay seasoning.

Over several hours and a few other munchies, we were very content.

Haleigh took a couple of recipes and combined them to make these delicious chocolate chip brownies.
