February 14, 2022 – Happy Valentine's Day from Portsmouth, VA
Day 69 of our trip.

We are docked at the Ocean Yacht Marina. Again. We arrived Saturday afternoon. Avoiding weather and using the marina as a staging area to arrange for deliveries and do some maintenance is why we are here.

Saturday had a high of 70 degrees and yesterday and today we are in the 30s.

This morning Mark went to the office to collect an Amazon delivery and has been on the phone looking for oil. Diesel engine oil. He is looking to get a 5-gallon pale. Did he succeed? Stay tuned.

Did you watch the Super Bowl?
It was a good game and most of the commercials were entertaining.
The halftime show was liked by many and disliked by many.
Typical social media banter. I was entertained by it all; the game, the commercials, and the half-time show.

We had a few munchies, texted with friends and family and since the NE Patriots weren't playing not too many people that we spoke with had too much enthusiasm towards the game but also said they thought it was a good game.

How do we celebrate Valentine's Day on our boat?

Celebrated by doing an engine oil change of course!!

And, that is not the only thing….Valkyrie also got…..

…A new exhaust fan.

Guess what else is going on this Valentine's Day here on Valkyrie.

The generator engine hour meter is not working. It has been on 3309 hours since the day we bought the boat. How does this get fixed?
It doesn't.

Like a mileage counter on a car, you cannot adjust the hour meter.

This is not a priority, so Mark will add that to his: When we get home To-Do list.

So…what else?

Haleigh baked us a Red Velvet cake with cream cheese frosting.
No boxed simpleton here…the real deal from scratch. Yum.

Mark got: His favs…recesses!

HB got: Truffles and kisses.

Cynthia got?
Dinner out at a nearby restaurant with my hubby
and a bag of Dove Dark Chocolate Hearts from Haleigh.

Lots of love from us to you!