Somewhere on the Water

January 29, Day 53
Charleston, SC

We had snow flurries this morning!

So....I had to go back to the grocery store. After a multi-hour trip with Haleigh yesterday. I needed to run (by run I mean mosey at a slow, sloth-like speed) back to get stuff for her to finish her sweet treats that we are bringing with us to Frank, Regina & Milo's house.

They have graciously invited us to their home for dinner.

Haleigh made sugar cookies with cream cheese frosting topped with fruit. She also made chocolate sauce. Just warm and pour over your favorite ice cream.

Before we go and enjoy our evening...little did we know at 1:00 p.m., while doing chores that we would be out until 1:00 a.m.

It was a great evening spent with friends. Good food, lots of stories, and laughter. They have a lovely home and their dog Trudy is so cute. She is very playful and friendly.

It is a blessing to have had the opportunity to connect with them after all this time.

Look another ship!

Yesterday's blog had photos of the battery and rainbow row.

Did you know that Rainbow Row refers to the pastel-colored houses located on the Battery?

The Battery is the seawall & promenade located at the tip of the peninsula. It is where the Ashley & Cooper Rivers come together to form Charleston Harbor.
