Somewhere on the Water

March 6, 2022 – Onset, MA @ Safe Harbor Marina
Day 89 – Sunday

So wonderful to be greeted by a friend this morning! PJ came by with Dunkin coffee. New Englander's run on Dunkin – right?! So their slogan says.

After a great catch-up conversation, the day progressed with several loads of laundry in between rain showers. It was a long walk to the laundry room but well worth it. Clean, large-capacity machines at only $1.50 per load were a welcomed amenity.

Rain & fog today. Somewhere in this fog are the shore and the marina's office & facilities.

The Cape Cod Canal is somewhere in there

The fog lifted for a short time this afternoon and we were lucky enough to see this bald eagle!

The same seal we saw yesterday was lounging on the same rock today. All-day. Same rock, different day! Just a bit of reach for my camera. If you read yesterday's blog you can see I tried to take a photo of the seal but it is not clear.

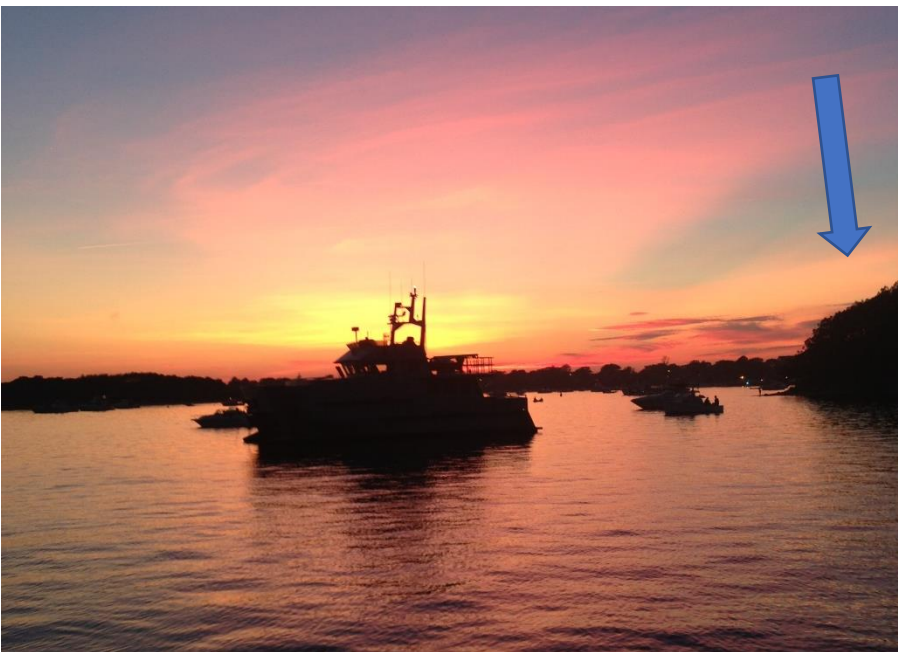

Tomorrow if the fog has cleared, we cruise the remainder of the canal to the Sandwich Town Marina where we will be docked for March.

I mentioned that we used to bring our Chris Craft, Second Nature here to Onset, MA. We would anchor, swim, kayak and try to explore Wickets Island. We would make up ghost stories at night while at anchor and we would often enjoy Onset's 4th of July fireworks. Coming onto shore and getting ice cream was a special treat. I have not given too much thought about it since we have not visited for many years but I am so excited about the plans for this island.

I read here on this site a possible picnic area, cleaning up the poison ivy, making it easier for boaters...I hope it is all true can come to fruition.

This is one of many photos from when we would anchor off the island. This is from 2013.

Tomorrow will be our official last day of cruising! Stay tuned!
